THE GREENEST BUILDING

Over the next 20 years, one-third of our nation's existing building stock will be demolished in order to replace seemingly inefficient buildings with energy-efficient "green" buildings. Is demolition on this scale really the best use of natural resources? Or, like urban renewal programs of the 1960s, is it part of a well-intentioned planning strategy with devastating environmental and cultural consequences?

The Greenest Building provides a compelling argument for conservation, rehabilitation and adaptive reuse of our existing building stock as the single most effective strategy for reducing, reusing and recycling one of our most important consumer products—our buildings.
